

UZO MADU

Uzo Madu is the Founder of What's in it for Africa, an online platform exploring Africa's position in the global political landscape, starting with the EU-Africa current affairs context. She reports on EU-Africa current affairs developments directly from the EU capital, Brussels in Belgium, speaking with leading political influencers about the consequences and realities of EU policy when it comes to African political and economic interests. Covering topics such as the ending of the EU Milk production quota, African Union reforms, Brexit, misleading African narratives and Economic Partnership Agreements.

Her writing can be found in African Business Magazine, International Politics & Society and TRUE Africa. Uzo has moderated high-level panels, most recently at the World Trade Organisation, the European Commission's Development Days, and the LSE Africa Summit and has been called upon by the BBC, CNBC Africa and RFI Internationale (FR) to offer her insights on issues such as Brexit, the African Union's development and EU Tax Avoidance legislation.
